Calling Undergraduate Research Experience Award (UREAP) recipients, Bachelor of Interdisciplinary Studies students, honours students, directed studies students, Knowledge Makers, and graduate students, and all others conducting primary research with people for the first time.

This research ethics information session is for you. We'll discuss registering for ROMEQ; the importance of the Tri-Council Policy Statement, Core Tutorial, and the Secwépemc Nation Research Ethics Guidelines; and key participant documents including invitations to participate and consent forms. REB members will answer your questions about preparing your very first ethics applications.

Research Ethics Workshops

Community-based, Anti-Colonial Research Methods & Ethics

Winter 2025:

January 30, 2025

From 2 – 3:30pm

OLARA Research Hub

Join us for an in-depth discussion on integrating ethical principles into community-based research, with a focus on anti/de-colonial and relational approaches.

This session will explore collaborating with communities to co-create knowledge; addressing colonial legacies and centring Indigenous and local knowledge; building trust, respect, and reciprocity with research participants; designing and conducting research that is ethical, inclusive, and transformative. Enhance your research practices with ethical, justice-oriented methods while learn from real-world case studies and engage in meaningful discussions.
